Psychosocial Development, Risk and Prevention Study Section (PDRP)

The Psychosocial Development, Risk, and Prevention [PDRP] Study Section reviews applications that focus on the development of psychopathology and problem behaviors, the identification of individual and contextual risk and protective factors and processes, and the design and testing of intra- and inter-personal interventions related to social development across the life span. Applications on risk and protective factors and preventive interventions may be focused on outcomes and comorbid conditions related to the broader understanding of developmental psychopathology as well as optimal development.

Specific areas covered by PDRP:

- Risk and protective factors and preventive interventions related to developmental psychopathology and problem behaviors, including violence, child abuse and maltreatment, aggression, suicidal behavior, substance use and other negative influences. Quantitative and qualitative approaches with particular emphasis on longitudinal and multilevel strategies are encouraged.
- Risk and protective factors and individual interventions related to social development, including social skills and coping, emotion regulation strategies, social competence training, and school readiness.
- Risk and protective factors and interpersonal interventions related to social development, including family relations, parenting skills, parent-child interaction, peer relationships, school-based interventions and normal social development.
